

Juzaily Fekry LEONG and Ketan PANDE

A right-handed 50-year-old lady attended the orthopaedic outpatient clinic with acute onset of severe pain in her right shoulder. There was no history of injury. On examination she was tender around her shoulder joint and had restricted range of movements. Routine blood tests ruled out any possibility of infection. Plain radiograph of the shoulder was done and is shown in the Panel.

Q: What is the diagnosis?

Answer: refer to page 278
